The South African Constitution recognizes 11 official languages in South Africa. Since 1994, indigenous languages have had a rare opportunity to thrive. There is, therefore, an increasing demand for language practitioners.

The purpose of this qualification is to provide a professional skills and competencies to the people who work in the various fields of languages. Such people are referred to as Language Practitioners, and companies, government departments or international agencies employ them. The qualification in Language Practice means that learners will be capable of:

- Performing professional communication functions effectively in at least two South African and/or international languages.
- Translating, Interpreting, and editing in various professional contexts.
- Organizing, managing, and facilitating professional communication activities in the community and in industry.
- Communicating in an additional African or foreign language.

Career Opportunities

Language practitioners can work as language facilitators in small, medium, and large institutions. Government departments and municipal offices all over South Africa, as well as international organizations and agencies, also employ several Language Practitioners. Interpreters are in demand at conferences, public events, in courts, and in the tourism industry.

A person with a Diploma in Language Practice enters the industry as a Junior Language Practitioner. As he/she gains more experience he/she can become a Senior/Principal Chief Language Practitioner in charge of several other Language Practitioners.
